Sevenlings:

Created by Roddy Lumsden

1. Inspired by Anna Akhmatova.
2. Two triplets and a single line.
3. First three lines contains an element of three.
4. Three statements or list of three details, names. objects, or possibilities.
5. Next three statement connect directly or indirectly. The second line has another three statements and the last line some sort of denouement.
6. Final line is the punch line.
7. No set metrical rules. Rhyme is desirable in this short form.
8. Lumsden did not title his poems. I tend to like titles.
9. Sevenlings should be offbeat, mysterious or disturbing giving the feeling of a story being told. The poem should have an ambience with the reader.
